The Cat Goes Species-Centric

Responding to customer complaints that humans were the only animals to routinely drink the breast milk of another animal, CoffeeCat has eliminated bovine milk, cream and other dairy products from its Coffee Fixin's Bar™, replacing them with human milk.

“We’ve heard our customers loud and clear” said CoffeeCat spokesperson Sherry Nodairy. “The coffee industry has exploited dairy cattle for too long. For the love of Pete, let’s just leave their teats alone ! There is absolutely no good reason on this green Earth that tea time needs to be teat-time.”

Due to problems sourcing packaged human milk, the company elected to “go all in”, hiring live, human wet nurses to deliver the goods. “It’s very dignified, and very discreet. Not like that unwholesome, tawdry topless coffee shop in Maine” sniffed Nodairy. “Customers just buy their coffee or tea, put in their own sugar, Sweet N’ Low™, or Splenda™, and then tell the Milk Sommelier how many squirts they want. It’s very simple, and utterly species-centric.”
